Money in Silver.

Money in Silver. A big English syndicate is buying up silver mines in Canada, the United States and Mexico, in all nine proper ties, believed to be very valuable. The Rice sends of the purchasers regard as very low. The purchases are said to have resulted from the present silver policy of the United States. Perhaps they are also connected with a belief that this country will soon be up to its ears in free silver coinage.

An expert estimates the cost of mining an ounce of allyer in the United States at 51 cents, and says that since there is much less than an ounce of silver in the silver dollar the producer may have a handsome profit out of a dollar worth intrinsically not more than 65 cents.
